

Your flag and my flag! And oh, how much it holds—
Your land and my land—secure within its folds!
Your heart and my heart beat quicker at the sight;
Sun-kissed and wind-tossed, red and blue and white,
The one flag—the great flag—the flag for me and you—
Glorifies all else beside—the red, white and blue!

—WILBUR D. NESBIT.

Oh! thus be it ever when freemen shall stand
Between their loved homes and the war's desolation;
Blest with vict'ry and peace, may the heav'n rescued land
Praise the pow'r that hath made and preserved us a nation;
Then, conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
And this be our motto: "In God is our trust;"
And the star-spangled banner in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL EDWARD MARTIN

Was a sergeant in Co. K of the "Old Fighting Tenth" Regiment in 1898-9, during its service in the Spanish-American war. He was in the battle of Malate, July 31, 1898, and served throughout the war in the Philippines. He has been a member of the regiment continuously for 21 years. He was promoted to lieutenant, then to captain of Co. K, then was chosen major in the Tenth, being the senior major of the regiment, (and senior major in the state), when the troops were called into service in the war with Germany. He was promoted to lieutenant colonel on the field at Courmont, France, and was in command of the regiment in all the big battles. He was given a citation and had the Distinguished Service Cross, with one oak leaf, conferred upon him by General Pershing.

On July 30, 1918, his regimental headquarters were entirely destroyed by a German shell, Col. Martin receiving two wounds. Seventeen officers and men were killed and many wounded by this shell. He also suffered severely from gas in the Vesle river and Argonne Forest battles.

GENERAL RICHARD COULTER

Has long been connected with Pennsylvania military organizations and belongs to a family of soldiers. He was second lieutenant of Company I, of Greensburg, a unit of the "Fighting Tenth" during its service in the Philippines, in the Spanish-American war. In the National Guard of Pennsylvania, after returning from the war, he was promoted to captain of Company I, then to major in the Tenth and later to colonel of the regiment, in which position he served for several years. At the entry of the United States in the war with Germany, he received the commission of brigadier general and was later given command of the Forty-first Division. Following his arrival in France, he was placed in command of the port at le Havre and rendered distinguished service in that capacity, this being considered the best port the Americans had.

THE 110TH REGIMENT IN THE GREAT WAR

Authentic History of Its Activities—True Accounts of Battles, With Stories of the Bravery of Our Men.—150 Officers Killed or Wounded; 3,722 Enlisted Men Killed, Wounded or Missing.

By LIEUTENANT COLONEL EDWARD MARTIN.

A story of the activities of the 110th Infantry during the World War requires a brief statement of the organization and training of the regiment.

The 110th is a continuation of the "Old Fighting 10th." The 10th Regiment of the National Guard of Pennsylvania was organized in the summer of 1873 and mustered into service during December of the same year. Its district comprises the counties of Greene, Washington, Beaver, Westmoreland, Blair, Fayette, and Somerset. Company K, of Waynesburg, has the honor of being the oldest company in the regiment, having been organized January 15, 1873, by Captain Kent, and has had continuous service since that time.

April 27, 1898, the regiment under the command of Colonel A. L. Hawkins was called to the colors to take part in the Spanish-American War, and was mustered into federal service May 11 and 12, 1898. On May 18 the regiment started upon its memorable trip to the Philippines, where on July 17, to the sound of Admiral Dewey's guns it sailed into Manila harbor and became a part of General Merritt's command. During its campaigning in the Philippines the regiment won distinction and honor seldom attributed to a military organization. Its baptism of fire was received at the battle of Malate, July 31, 1898, and was the hardest fought battle of the Spanish-American War, and against enormous odds the regiment was completely victorious and received the thanks of the commanding general and commendations of other units. The 10th, while in the Philippines took part in the following other battles: Manila, LaLoma, Caloocan, San Francisco del Monte, Tuliahan River, Meycauyan, Marilao, Bucave, Guiguinto and Malolos. The casualties were as follows: Killed in action, 6; wounded, 70; died of wounds, 9; died of disease, 6; missing, 1.

During the Mexican Border trouble in 1916 the regiment faithfully served for almost four months in Texas, where it rendered conspicuous service.

Sunday, July 15, 1917, the various companies were directed to mobilize at the home stations for the war with Germany, and on August 5, 1917, the units were drafted into federal service. September 7, 1917, the regiment started to Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga., for further organization and training.

The new table of organization called for 3,750 officers and men. The experiences of the war in Europe had taught military experts that soldiers must receive a very high degree of training, both physically and intellectually. The regiment when called, in July, had about 1,900 officers and men. The officers had been carefully selected and trained and the men were from the best stock of Southwestern Pennsylvania. In the selection of the enlisted personnel of the 10th regiment hundreds of men had been rejected and none but the best were taken. The War Department directed a reorganization of the Pennsylvania division in order to secure the larger regiments and directed the reduction of the infantry commands from nine to four. Much speculation followed as to which organization would be the fortunate ones, and retained as a part of the new division, but on October 11, General Orders No. 22 were issued retaining the 10th Regiment, but changing the name to the 110th, the name being officially designated as 110th Infantry (10th Pennsylvania Infantry). The order transferred practically all of the junior officers and enlisted men of the 3d Pennsylvania to the 110th. The 3d was one of the old regiments of Philadelphia.

Richard Coulter, of Greensburg, who had command of the Old Tenth for many years, was made a brigadier general. While all rejoiced in his deserved promotion, yet officers and men alike regretted the losing of this splendid soldier and man, who had given years of work and thought in the organization of the regiment, and the high place it had attained as a National Guard unit was largely due to his efforts. All naturally expected him to be assigned to the Pennsylvania Division but much to our disappointment he was sent elsewhere.

General Coulter was loyally and enthusiastically supported at all times in his National Guard work by Colonel Thomas S. Crago, a Greene countyman, and second in command in the regiment.

Colonel George E. Kemp, of Philadelphia, was made commander of the 110th Infantry, but he was ordered to the school for field officers, and the real work of training and reorganizing the new regiment fell to Lieutenant-Colonel Henry W. Coulter. Colonel Coulter had served in the Philippines with the 10th and had been a field officer for many years. The exceptional training and high discipline of the organization when it landed in France, was largely due to the hard work of this splendid officer. His efforts rightly gave him the rank of colonel and command of the 110th, but the unwritten ruling of the War Department at the beginning of the war against giving National Guardsmen such rank, robbed him of the deserved honor. Just preceding the baptism of fire of the 110th, he was transferred to another organization in order that his organizing and training ability might strengthen it. Like the true soldier that he is, he entered the work enthusiastically and gave his best efforts to the government. He was soon in command of his new regiment and proved a brave and capable commander and rendered distinguished services until he was wounded and forced to remain many weeks in the hospital.

The regiment left Camp Hancock April 24, 1918, but before leaving the camp it had worked strenuously for seven months, receiving the new combat principles evolved by the European war and assimilating them with the American ideas of fighting, which had been learned in wars gone by. The work of the regiment in Europe demonstrates how fitting it was to have this thorough training in America, for time and again sergeants, corporals, and privates assumed positions of great responsibility and performed the work so skillfully as to receive the highest commendation of their superiors and in many cases cited for promotion to higher rank. The discipline instilled at Camp Hancock never left the men, even under the most trying and difficult circumstances.

The regiment received its final equipment at Camp Merritt, N. J., and embarked on three different ships May 2, and first set foot on foreign soil at Liverpool, on May 16, and traveled across England to Folkestone. All along the route the regiment was enthusiastically greeted by the English women and children, and at many stations were given coffee and sandwiches by the mothers and sisters of the English "Tommies." In two days the regiment landed safely across the Channel at Calais, France, and the first night in camp were bombed, but no casualties resulted. In this camp were English, French, Portuguese, Italians, Chinese, Hindoos and practically the representatives of all the Allied armies. At this time the British were being hard pushed by the enemy and several American divisions were brigaded with the English. The men were given British rifles and machine guns and fed with British rations. The regiment was first located in the Flanders district and the men were introduced to French billets, which consisted of barns and other outbuildings. As the danger of the Germans at this point had greatly subsided the higher command decided that the Americans should be sent to the assistance of the French, so on June 14 the regiment arrived in the sector south of Chateau Thierry and was placed in the 38th French Corps. June 24, under orders of the French general the regiment was moved further north and very close the actual line of battle along the Marne river.

Much preparation was made by the French for the celebration of the 4th of July, but at 1:50 on the morning of the Fourth orders came from the French to immediately move and occupy a line of trenches just south of Conde. In fifteen minutes the movement started and without rest the men, burdened with heavy packs and an extra supply of ammunition, reached their position shortly after daylight. The expected drive from the Boche did not materialize, and by noon the men had returned to their billets, but too tired and worn out to enjoy any holiday celebration. July 8 the men again took up this position and remained there until July 23, when the Germans had been driven northward beyond the Marne. The 2d and 3d Battalions were in the trenches and the 1st Battalion was held in reserve. Two companies of the 1st Battalion, B and C, were taken to the outpost line on July 10, where they were assigned sectors with the 113th French, the order designating that the companies would be under the direct command of the French Battalion commanders. The officers and the men of these companies performed outpost and other duties until July 15, when the last German offensive started, sweeping successfully across the Marne in mass formation, being assisted by an artillery preparation, which lasted for seven hours, and being the heaviest of the war up to that time. The French fell back and the Americans stood their ground but were soon hit from either flank. So gallantly, however, did the Americans conduct themselves that the Germans were checked and on the following day the drive was absolutely stopped. B and C both sustained very heavy loss, the two companies losing nine officers, among them Captain Truxal of Company C, who held his ground until more than three hours after the retirement of the elements on his right and left. The fury of the German barrage had never been equaled, but regardless of it and the terrible onslaught of the Boche infantry, official records disclose that no time during the day did the Germans suc-

it was found that the regiment had had sixty-five killed, seventy wounded, and two hundred and seventy missing. It was later learned that many of the missing were dead. On the afternoon of July 23 the regiment started a two days' march in order to get in position as reserve for some other elements, whose positions were rapidly changing, and at the end of one day the regiment was ordered back to practically its old position at Conde. It arrived there the evening of July 26. At four o'clock in the morning of July 27 the men, foot sore from several days of hard marching, were again put on the move headed for the north side of the Marne. It was soon learned that the regiment was on its way to come in contact with the Boche and the officers and men contemplated in great glee getting even for the unequal battle waged the week before. The weather was rainy, but regardless of the terrible condition of the roads, the regiment made good headway. Troops were moving in all directions, and surrounding the men were heavy calibre guns and batteries of light field artillery. On the night of July 27 the regiment received an order to relieve the 156th French. That night will always be remembered by those taking part in the march. Roads were a sea of mud as it had been raining for several days, and it was total darkness except as the flash of lightning would illuminate the way. The conditions were almost unbelievable. French troops, which had been relieved were hurrying to the rear. Trucks and heavy artillery had sunk in the mud to the hubs. The men were forced to take to the trails in the woods and with heavy packs were straining every eye in order to keep in touch with the men in front of them. Intermittent shelling added to the confusion of the hour. But finally just before daylight the relief was completed with the Second and Third Battalions on the line and the First Battalion in support. Regimental headquarters were established at Fresnes.

The Germans had skillfully prepared a position along the hills north of the Ourcq river. North of the Ourcq river there rises a slope of seven hundred yards in the direction of Clerges Hill and marked on the military map 212. The crest of this hill was covered by dense woods known as Griemettes Woods. Along the edge of the woods on the hill the enemy had placed innumerable machine guns and a trench system had also been constructed, and every approach from the river had been skillfully covered by light artillery. The position had been occupied so carefully in order to delay the approach of the American troops until the German army could retire with all its equipment to the Vesle river, fifteen kilometers further north. The regiment made six attacks on this hill before it was finally successful and it cost in casualties more than eleven hundred men. Lieutenant-Colonel Fetzner, who had just been assigned to the regiment, was killed during this fighting.

At five o'clock on the evening of July 29 the writer was handed a brief note directing him to take command of the regiment. Regimental headquarters were immediately moved to Courmont. The regiment had been given inadequate artillery preparation and support and in addition the infantry commands had not been moving in unison. The regimental commander demanded proper artillery preparation and that all lines move at the same time. Through the efforts of General Muir, the commander of the 28th Division, this was accomplished and at 2:30 o'clock July 30 the sixth and final attack on the hill was started. After a sweeping artillery fire had almost completely demolished the woods, the long line of infantry moved slowly forward closely following the barrage. It was more like a drill than a great battle. The

LIEUT. COL. CHARLES I. FADDIS.

Lieutenant Colonel Charles I. Faddis, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Faddis, of Waynesburg, and a former member of Co. K, Tenth Regiment, received a commission as captain at Ft. Niagara Officers' Training camp and was assigned to Co. F, 4th Ammunition train. He sailed for France about May 15, 1918, landing at Brest, May 30. Ten days later he was sent with his company to the Chateau-Thierry sector. He went through the Champagne-Marne, Vesle River, St. Mihiel and the Argonne Forest campaigns; at all times in the thick of the battles. On Sept. 26 he was promoted to major and on Oct. 26 received a promotion to lieutenant colonel. His regiment has been located at Coblenz, Germany, for several months.

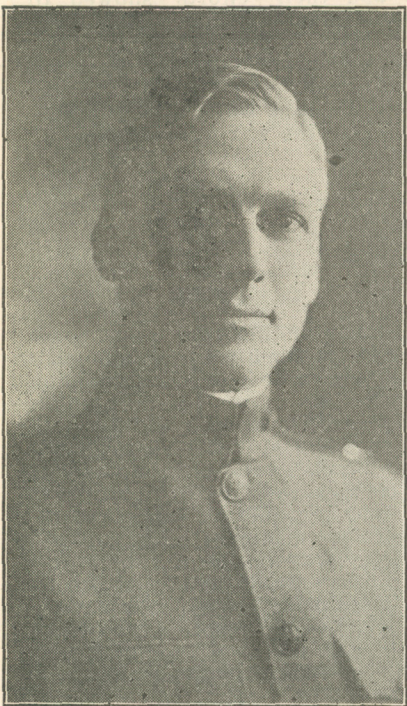

LIEUT. COL. JOHN AIKEN

Was in command of Co. H, (Washington), Tenth Regiment, when the troops were called into service for the Great War. He was promoted to major in the 110th Regiment and had charge of the Second Battalion during most of the hard battles in France. He was later promoted to lieutenant colonel and was in charge of the regiment from March 15 to April 15, 1919.

ceeded in getting any troops across the front occupied by the American troops.

The remainder of the regiment was held on the line of resistance and while they had many narrow escapes, the casualties were few. At the end of this first week of fighting

CAPT. W. C. MONTGOMERY.

Capt. Walter C. Montgomery, of Waynesburg, had been commander of K Co., Tenth Regiment, for ten years and was in charge of the company during the training at Camp Hancock. Shortly after the arrival of the 110th Regiment in France he was transferred to the headquarters of the Second Army Corps in which duties he remained throughout the war. He had been in the state and federal army service eighteen years.

long training in the United States never showed to better advantage. The men moved in perfect order and a field officer of the 32d Division who was witnessing the assault explained in admiration, "That is the finest example of American heroism, discipline and bravery that I have ever seen." The men were so thoroughly exasperated that many who were ordered to the rear tore off their tags and returned to the line. In this final attack the Third Battalion and Company D of the First Battalion were in the front line with the Second Battalion in support and doing the mopping up work.

The brigade commander directed the commander of the 110th to take command of all forces and to place the reserve in the line as it was needed. Every department of the regiment, nobly assisted by the 109th Infantry and the 108th Machine Gun Battalion, functioned as an intelligent piece of machinery.

When it was found that the hill had been successfully attained, fresh troops were sent in in order to resist the counter attack. The regimental headquarters were hit by a six inch shell and completely destroyed just as the reserves were being sent into the line. Although seventeen officers and men were killed and many wounded, by this shell, yet the work moved on, and so complete was the victory that over four hundred Germans were buried on this hill as the result of the sixth and successful attack. The final position having been attained the regiment was relieved. The men had gone for three days without a hot meal. They were terribly exhausted and a third of the command had been lost, but they had made a glorious page in American history. Individual courage and bravery requires the most favorable comment. Every unit and department had performed most valiant service.

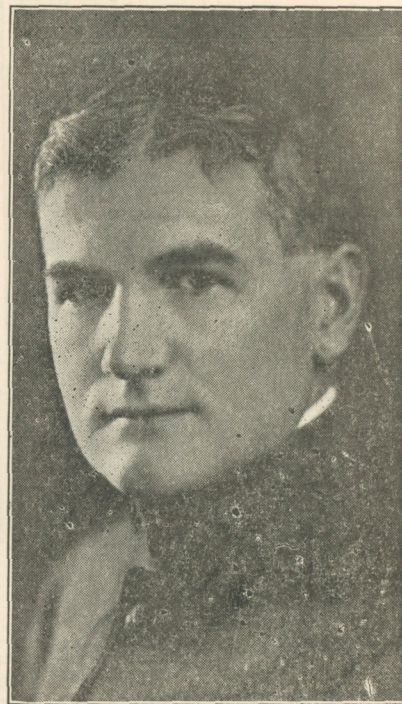

The regiment was taken back to a woods for a rest where five Boche bombs exploded killing twenty two and wounding eighty. A dud fell in the center of one platoon of Company M, which was four feet long and had an estimated weight of five hundred pounds.

On August 2, the regiment was again ordered to move forward, where it remained on active duty on the Vesle, which was a holding position, until early in September when it was relieved. On August 10, Colonel Frank Tompkins was made commander of the regiment. The regimental headquarters were placed at Bon Maison Fme. On September 5 the regiment was ordered to cross the Vesle which it did. During this day the regiment lost the service of Major Thomas B. Anderson, who was killed while leading his men. He was an officer of great ability and courage and was loved and admired by everybody in the regiment. His daring work won for him a D. S. C. During the afternoon of September 6 Major Martin was directed to take command of the 109th Infantry, succeeding Colonel Ham, who had been wounded. Colonel Tompkins, who had been gassed was taken to the hospital and Captain John Aiken took command of the regiment. After the 109th was relieved from the line, Colonel Martin was again placed in command of the 110th and on September 10 moved south to get in readiness for the Argonne-Meuse offensive, which was to see the closing of the war. The regiment during this time was also in the position as reserve for the St. Mihiel salient drive, but this proved so easy for the Americans that it was not necessary to call on reserve troops.

The evening of September 25 all elements of the 110th were moved into position for the great Argonne fight. The First Battalion, with Major Thompson in command, had already occupied the trenches. The jump off was made at 5:30 in the morning of September 26. For three hours preceding that time the thirty-six hundred guns of the American artillery units were thundering forth their missiles of death and destruction toward the German lines. Twenty tanks had also been turned over to the regiment. The Germans had held the position for nearly four years and it was fortified as well as military genius could make it. The morning was foggy, making it difficult for the different organizations to keep in contact. The ground over which the advance was made was rough, roads were full of shell-holes and there was much underbrush where the enemy concealed machine-guns and light artillery. During the drive, which was along the Aire river, the regiment captured Boureulleis, Petite Boureulleis, and Varennes, the latter being of considerable importance to the Germans, and where several thousand troops were practically safe from shell fire. We captured several hundred prisoners, large store houses filled with quan-

When our troops were called into the Great War he was promoted to lieutenant colonel and went to Camp Hancock as commander of the regiment. He was in charge of the training of the 110th Regiment and in command when it went overseas. In July, 1918, he was transferred to the 109th Regiment to give it training and remained with the 109th until he was wounded in September.

COLONEL JOSEPH H. THOMPSON

Was transferred from the Fourteenth regiment to the Tenth and elected captain of Company B. He was chosen major in the 110th Regiment and on a battlefield in France was promoted to lieutenant colonel. He had conferred upon him, by Gen. Pershing, the Distinguished Service Cross, for his work at Apremont. He was later promoted to colonel of the 110th and took charge of the regiment April 12, 1919, and was in command when the regiment returned home. He has since been sent to France to have charge of athletics in the A. E. F.

titles of food and supplies, together with three locomotives and many cars which were afterward used to haul supplies to the American troops.

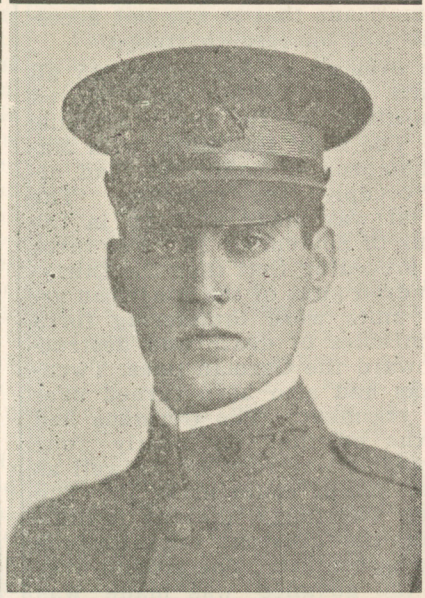

September 27 the regiment resumed its advance and during the morning captured Montblainville. The regiment at this time was considerably in advance of the elements on either its right or left, but was directed by the commanding general to hold the position. The Germans made a counter-attack, both from the front and flanks. Many German machine guns together with much machine gun ammunition had been captured. Several of the non-commissioned officers had been taught the use of the Boche machine guns and these were extensively used at Montblainville and probably saved the day for the Americans. The regiment lost heavily in the battle and it was long in the night before all the wounded were evacuated. The right and left elements, only, got their positions after the shades of night had fallen.

On the morning of the 28th the regiment advanced in the direction of Apremont, but this stronghold was only captured after several attempts, and it was almost dark before the enemy was driven out. Some of the hardest fighting in which the 110th took part occurred around this village, which was one of the keys to the American advance. Colonel Martin received orders late on the night of September 30 to make an attack the next morning at six o'clock. Twenty minutes before the time set for the American attack the Germans made a drive on the American position, using two regiments in the front line. American machine guns were placed at different points to cover the advance of the infantry. The field artillery had been brought forward to assist the infantry in its advance. Twelve tanks were also present in working order at the disposal of the regiment. The Boche seemed to be under the impression that the American troops would be moving into position, but the Americans had gone into position at 5 o'clock in order that hot coffee might be furnished the men if possible. Wave after wave of the enemy advanced but they were driven off with a splendid combination of field artillery, tanks, machine guns, hand grenades, and all other methods of modern fighting. The German regiments were so badly cut up and defeated that they were put out of business for the remainder of the war. They left in dead before our position over 400 men and a similar number came into our lines as prisoners. Our loss in the engagement was very small. Company K and Company I engaged the enemy with hand grenades. The 110th regiment held this position for two days under continual shell and machine-gun fire. About this time a Battalion of the 77th Division became lost, and assisted by the 109th infantry the 110th regiment crossed the Aire river and proceeded in the direction of Chatel Chehery. A regiment of the 82d Division also came in and assisted at this place, the organizations moving in a westerly direction in order to relieve the pressure against the 77th Division, and making it possible for it to advance.

During the night of October 9-10, the regiment was relieved after 14 days of continuous fighting in which it had lost in casualties 1200 men.

The regiment captured in this drive over 60 machine guns, 5 anti-tank guns, 7 pieces of artillery, large quantities of food, 4,000 overcoats, locomotives, railroad cars, railroad tracks, 4,000 blankets, wagons, kitchens, signal equipment, much

LIEUT. DAVID M. GARRISON.

First Lieut. D. M. Garrison, of Waynesburg, served for a number of years as an officer of Co. K, Tenth Regiment. He trained and went to France with the 110th. He led a platoon of Company K into battle during its first severe engagement, on the fateful July 29, and lay out upon the battle-field fifteen hours suffering from a gas attack before he was found and sent to a hospital. Later he suffered an attack of appendicitis and underwent an operation. The gas severely affected his lungs and he has not yet recovered from it. He is now in Park View hospital, Pittsburg.

LIEUT. RALFORD B. PURMAN.

Lieut. Ralford B. Purman, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Purman, of Waynesburg, is a former member of Co. K, Tenth Regt., and served with that organization on the Mexican border in 1916. When the United States entered the war he was recommended for the First Officers' Training Camp at Ft. Niagara and received a commission as second lieutenant. He was assigned to K Company, 110th Regiment and later was promoted to first lieutenant. In the battle of the Marne on July 29, he was severely gassed and suffered from shell shock, having his clothes almost all torn off by the bursting of a German shell. After the signing of the armistice he was made supply purchasing agent for the U. S. government and was sent to Switzerland where he spent several months.

ammunition and other military supplies.

We then went into the Theacourt sector, where the regiment remained until the close of the war, performing front line duty, where it would have been a part of the army to operate against Metz, had the war continued.

November 2, 1918, Colonel Martin was directed to return to the United States for the purpose of training and commanding a new regiment. The following official regimental notice was made in reference to the same.

"On this day the regiment, with the deepest feeling of regret said farewell to its former commander, Lieut.-Colonel Edward Martin, who had been ordered home for promotion and assignment to duty. No words could adequately express the appreciation and devotion of the regiment for Colonel Martin or his love for it. As a mere boy he enlisted in the Old Tenth Pennsylvania and served with it in the Philippines and had been continuously with the regiment until it was incorporated in the 110th Infantry, with him as one of the battalion commanders. He was in command of the regiment during all of its great battles."

Colonel Blanton Windship was placed in command of the regiment and he was succeeded by Colonel Ham. Colonel Ham was followed by Colonel Kinniston. These were all regular army men and March 19, 1919, Colonel Aiken, a 110th man was placed in charge of the regiment, which position he held until Colonel Joseph H. Thompson, another 110th officer, returned to the organization April 12, 1919, and brought the regiment back to the United States.

The officers and men, after the cessation of hostilities continued to train and their efforts showed to splendid advantage upon their return to the United States. The reception at home is too recent to receive comment.

The casualties of the 110th regiment during the war were as follows:

	Prisoners and
	Killed.	Died.	Miss.	Wound.	To-
		ing.	ed.		tal.
Officers	27	2	11	110	150
Enlisted Men	538	12	457	2715	3722
Total	565	14	468	2825	3872

An article of this kind is not complete without some word of appreciation of those who made the splendid history of the 110th possible. The writer, at the beginning of this article, acknowledged the wonderful service and efforts of the men and of the early organizations of the regiment. Space does not permit an acknowledgement, or comment upon individual acts of bravery, heroism or loyalty, for brave deeds and remarkable things were being accomplished at all times. The proud record of the regiment is due more to the high and efficient standard attained than individual effort. The officers, the non-commissioned officers and the privates worked together as a well-trained and splendid team. The "dough" boys, the cooks, the men of the supply company, the signal men, the various headquarters units, the pioneer section, the machine-gun men, the one-pounders, the trench mortar platoon, the band, the personal department, the hospital corps all worked together in a spirit of harmony which crowned our efforts with success. A spirit of good cheer prevailed under the most adverse circumstances, and criticism and complaint were seldom heard.

Every field officer of the 110th Infantry, at the close of the Argonne campaign, was cited for extraordinary work and recommended for promotion. The writer regrets that it is not possible to comment and thank, in this article, many officers and men for the assistance rendered.

Particular mention should be made of some Greene county men. William E. Meighen, for exceptional leadership and gallantry in action was given a commission. It was the first field promotion received by any man in the 28th Division. A field promotion was also given to Sergeant Austin Dille for exceptional qualifications of leadership during the Argonne offensive. Sergeant James B. Patton, of Waynesburg, would have received similar recognition but was killed. General Muir, division commander, issued the following citation:

"It gives me pleasure to record, in General Orders, a tribute to the valorous conduct of James B. Patton, Sergeant Co. K, 110th Infantry, who distinguished himself by extraordinary gallantry in connection with military operations against an armed enemy of the United States under the following circumstances: On October 4, 1918, near Chatel Chehery, France, advancing from the second wave to locate the first platoon of his company, which was leading the attack, he learned upon reaching the commander of the first platoon that the enemy was threatening to cut it off, volunteering to go for assistance, he was mortally wounded before reaching the second wave but succeeded in transmitting his message to another before dying, thereby saving the first platoon."

James L. Farrell, of Waynesburg, member of the orderly section was cited in regimental orders as follows: "From July 15, 1918, to November 11, 1918, regimental headquarters were almost constantly under enemy fire and were gassed by the enemy for several days at a time. Regardless of shrapnel and high explosives and suffering caused by gas, the regimental clerks, stenographers, orderly section, motorcycle drivers, and message carriers, discharged their du-

The above is a picture of the 110th Regiment colors as they were carried in the parade, at Philadelphia, on the regiment's return from France.

Color Sergeants Albert Y. Crouse and Frank Kiel are bearing the flags. Sergeant Crouse, of Waynesburg, served with Co. K in the old Tenth in the Philippines.

LIEUT. WILLIAM G. MEIGHEN.

Lieut. William G. Meighen, of K Company, 110th Infantry, was killed in the battle of the Argonne Forest September 27, 1918. Lieut. Meighen was a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Meighen, of Wind Ridge, and had been a member of K Company for several years, having served on the Mexican border. He was promoted on the field to second lieutenant, the commission being received after his death. His brothers, Lieut. John Meighen and Sergt. James Meighen were in service in France during the war.

ties in a highly faithful and efficient manner."

The greatest consolation to the comrades of a soldier who has made the supreme sacrifice, is that he fell facing the enemy. The following Greene county men who were members of the 110th Infantry made the supreme sacrifice: William G. Meighen, John M. Paden, James B. Patton, Ben A. Manning, Bert Buchanan, Harold Carey, Hallie J. Closser, Harry Dunn, John Duvall, Allen K. Gabler, Floyd Hickman, Floyd B. Huffman, Max Lemley, Fred W. Marshall, Francis Moore, Charles Murphy, George T. McNeely, Edward McNicholas, Walter B. Riggle, Lawrence Staggers, James H. Swart, William W. Throckmorton, Russell K. Yoders, Norman Zahniser, James L. Farrell.

All these men fell with their faces to the front and were soldiers of the highest type. They lived in a manner to reflect the highest credit upon American arms and their memories will always be kept green by proud comrades.

The writer cannot express in words his appreciation of the loyal support given by the officers and men of the 110th Infantry. A more courageous or conscientious organization of men was never assembled. While a remarkable high state of discipline was always maintained, yet the action of all indicated that it was a willing discipline and that the services were performed with pride and always keeping in mind the great purpose of the war.

To the mothers and wives of the boys should be given the highest honor. They will never be able to appreciate how much their kind and loving letters of cheer and encouragement had to do with the success of the regiment.

The almost six hundred of the 110th Regiment, who made the supreme sacrifice, and whose bodies now sleep in the little American cemeteries in France, the living of the regiment hail with the greatest reverence and respect, and we call upon our friends and the friends of all

LIEUT. JAMES B. PATTON.

Lieut. James B. Patton, son of Attorney and Mrs. Joseph Patton, of Waynesburg, and a member of K Company, 110th Regiment, was killed in action on October 6, 1918, in the Argonne Forest offensive. His bravery and military efficiency in battle won him two promotions, from corporal to sergeant, and from sergeant to second lieutenant, his commission arriving after his death. He was given a citation by Gen. Muir, division commander, for "valorous conduct" and "having distinguished himself by extraordinary gallantry." He met his death in particularly hazardous service, which is recorded in Col. Martin's history of the 110th Regiment in this edition of the REPUBLICAN.

soldiers to make a new resolve that the principles for which these men and other men who have gone before us fought, may not be lost, but that the fires of patriotism and love of America be replenished, and that this country continue to enjoy the greatest growth and happiness in its history. Thus we will erect the greatest monument which can be erected to the brave boys of all our wars, who have given all that the principles of civil and religious liberty might live.

IN HONOR OF OUR SOLDIERS.

In honor of our Greene county soldiers THE REPUBLICAN has issued this souvenir edition. We have endeavored to make it of historical value and worthy of preservation.

Col. Edward Martin's history of the 110th Regiment and its services in France and the history of K Company, prepared by Capt. Hendler, Lieut. Dille, Sergt. Meighen, Sergt. Yoders and Corp. Earnest, a complete roll of the men who were called into service in the National Army, and the Roster of Co. K will all prove of interest to, present day readers and be valuable for future reference.

We have added many pictures and sketches which will be interesting to the soldiers and their friends, especially. It has all required a great deal of painstaking labor, but we feel sure it will be appreciated by many people.

To all the men who gave service on behalf of our nation and the cause of freedom, of whatever character, or in whatever branch of service, we extend our esteem; and for all the parents, wives and children, brothers and sisters, and others bound by the ties of love or friendship, who saw their brave heroes go away and not return, we have in our heart the deepest feeling. All honor to our nation's heroes of all wars and may their services and memory ever be revered!

INDEPENDENCE DAY.

Many long years have passed away,
Since our first Independence Day.
That day, which gave this nation birth,
Brought hope and freedom to the earth.

All hail that Independence Day!
When stern, grave men risked all, that they Might found this nation strong and free,
A land of justice, liberty.

Again 'tis Independence Day,
How swiftly pass the years away!
How very much twelve months can hold,
Of hope, of fear and grief, untold.

In the past year war's heavy hand
Has left its impress on our land,
And on the hearts and lives of men,
Which time cannot efface again.

But now for us the war is o'er,
Soldiers are coming home once more;
Save those who sleep the last long sleep,
Where crosses white their vigils keep.

And many men who went away,
Will march along our streets today.
Our hearts are filled with love and pride
For those who live; for those who died.

God bless our flag where e'er it be,
Floating today on land or sea;
The emblem still of all that's true,
Our flag, our own Red, White and Blue.

God bless our veterans, young and old!
More precious still than gems of gold.
The loyal heart, the willing hand,
So freely given for native land.

Oh, hail to Independence Day!
Rejoice, be glad, let music play;
Unfurl the flags unto the breeze,
Thanking our God for men like these.
Mrs. W. V. Hutchins.

HURRAH FOR COMPANY K!

Gaily marching to shrill fife and drum,
With swinging stride up the street
they come,
With laughter and jestings gay.
Home again from the terrible strife,
The thunder of battle, the strenuous life,
Home to mother, sweetheart and wife,
Hurrah for Company K!

Hurrah for the laddies, brave-hearted,
true!
Hats off to Old Glory, the Red, White

Moving along on its way!
Hurrah for our heroes! Nobly they bore
Their part in the strife—thank God it's now o'er!
And three cheers for our brave boys,
home from war!
Hurrah for Company K!

HISTORY OF COMPANY KInteresting Records From Officers' Diaries.—Accounts of Battles.—*2 Officers and 84 Men Killed; 3 Officers and 204 Men Wounded.

[Prepared by Capt. U. C. Hendler, Lieut. Austin Dille, Sergt. James Meighen, Sergt. Clarence Yoders and Corp. Clarence Earnest, of K Co.]

Company K, 10th Pennsylvania Infantry, National Guard, was mobilized July 15, 1917, under the command of Captain Walter C. Montgomery, 1st Lieut. David M. Garrison and 2d Lieut. Glenn A. Ross, and was drafted into the federal service August 5, 1917. The company was stationed at Waynesburg, Pa., and there started the training which later made it the envy of the whole regiment. The company was made up of the "sons of the soil," or in other words, largely the farmer lads of Greene county and of young men of Waynesburg and vicinity. These young men, by the untiring efforts of their officers and older men of the Guard became accustomed to the usual military routine and when they left Waynesburg, September 7, 1917, for their camp in the South they were by no means "Rookies."

Under command of Captain T. J. Kernaghan, 1st Lieut. Wilbur R. Small, and 2d Lieut. Ullman C. Hendler, Company K, Third Pennsylvania Infantry, National Guard, was called out on March 28, 1917. It proceeded to Pittsburgh, Pa., about April 1, 1917, where it guarded bridges and tunnels in and around that city. They were relieved August 15, 1917, and went into camp at Philadelphia, Pa. This company was selected to go to Camp Hancock, Ga., as advance detail. The personnel, composed of men from Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, were mostly seasoned soldiers, having been out of the service for only five months after returning from the Mexican Border in October, 1916.

After arriving at Camp Hancock, Ga., September, 9, 1917, the company began the policing and cleaning up of the camp. This was soon completed and we began intensive training for the work across the sea.

In October, 1917, Company K, 10th Penn'a. Infantry National Guard, and Company K, Third Penn'a. Infantry, National Guard, were united as one company and called Company K, 110th U. S. Infantry. It took but a short time for these two companies to become acquainted and they put forth every effort to make it the best company in the regiment. The company was still in command of Captain Walter C. Montgomery, First Lieut. David M. Garrison, with the addition of First Lieut. Wilbur B. Small, First Lieut. James G. Graham, and Second Lieuts. Ullman C. Hendler, and Franklin E. Waite. Second Lieut. Glenn A. Ross had been transferred to the Rainbow Division in August.

During the course of training many changes were made both in officers and enlisted men. The training was completed on or about the middle of April, 1918, and the division was considered the best trained troops in the U. S. army. On April 24, 1918, we left Camp Hancock, Ga., for Camp Merritt, N. J., where we were equipped for overseas service.

The company was very anxious to get started for France and was counting the days until its time came for sailing. On May 2, 1918, we left Camp Merritt, N. J., and went to New York, where we boarded the Ausonia, an English owned transport. On May 3, 1918 the transport sailed out of the harbor past the Statue of Liberty, with every man on deck watching her gradually fade in the distance, knowing that many of them would never look upon her again, but there were smiles upon their faces because they knew that they were going to fight for democracy and rid the world forever of Kaiserism. The transport sailed on across the Atlantic zigzagging this way and that so that they might miss any or all submarines that might be awaiting to send them to the bottom of the sea. After thirteen days of very tiresome sailing the transport came into the harbor at Liverpool, England. It was but a short time after disembarking that a cruiser rammed the stern of the Ausonia and laid her up in the repair shop for many days.

It was May 16, 1918, that the company landed in Liverpool, where it was welcomed with much enthusiasm. We boarded the train at that city and were soon on our way across the beautiful country of England. We landed at Dover, England, the same night and were marched to some barracks awaiting us. On May 17, 1918, we received orders to board a transport which was to take us to Calais, France, where we were hustled off to Rest Camp No. 6, East. Here we experienced our first air raid. We salvaged all our extra equipment and received new rifles and gas masks. We proceeded by railway to Lumbres, France, near St. Omer, detrained and hiked about six miles to a rest camp where we remained during the night. With an English guide we left the next morning for Lottingham where we underwent a period of training under the supervision of the English, at the same time being in British G. H. 2, reserve. At this place Captain Walter C. Montgomery was transferred to II Army Corp Headquarters and First Lieut. Edward R. Taylor, assumed command of the company.

Left Lottingham June 29, 1918, for the Meaux Sector (French). We hiked for three days, stopping at Wicquinghen, Coupelle Vielle, and the Hesdin Woods. Left the woods June 13, for Hesdin where we boarded the train for Esbly, proceeding by lorries to L'Epines Aux Bois, but in a few days we left for Artonges, south of the Marne near Montimiral. We rushed here to support the French who were resisting a strong offensive made by the Germans at this time.

On July 4, 1918, at 2 a. m., the call to arms was sounded and by a forced six mile hike we reached the support line trenches west of Conde-en-Brie. The French evidently checked the oncoming Germans, and we returned the next day to Artonges. On July 8, we returned to the support line trenches bivouacing in the woods near Conde-en-Brie. During the night the French heavy artillery opened fire, and continued almost the whole night. Here for the first time we heard shells passing over our heads.

On July 14 about midnight we experienced our first shelling from the Boche. The next morning with shrapnel flying overhead there was very little difficulty in having the men dig in. The next day First Lieut. Edward R. Taylor and Private John L. Burr were sent to the front line for reconnaissance. On this day Private William Gray was wounded, he being the first man in the company and also in the brigade to be wounded. In the evening of July 15, we received the report that Captain Edward R. Taylor and Private John L. Burr were missing. Lieut. Robert H. Herbert, of I Company, now assumed command of the company.

It was July 24th that we crossed the Marne river for the first time, passing through Chateau Thierry, and on July the 26th, we recrossed the Marne and bivouaced in a woods near St. Eugene. The next morning at three o'clock we moved forward to relieve the French (39th French Division) near Fere-en-Tardenois. We relieved the French about 2 a. m. July the 28th, for the first time being on the front line, with the "Jerries" not more than 1500 yards away. It seemed but a short time until the orders were passed down for us to go over the top at 12 o'clock. We crossed the field in a skirmish line, drawing a heavy machine gun fire, losing quite a number of men killed and wounded. Our commanding officer being wounded, Lieut. David M. Garrison now assumed command of the company. We crossed the Ourcq river and dug in for the night. On July 29, we started to take our objective, Hill 230, but received no artillery support and meeting with such heavy machine gun resistance from the Grimpettes Woods, we were forced to retire to our old positions. During this attack Lieut. Richard S. Bullitt was killed and Lieut. David M. Garrison was wounded. We also received heavy losses in enlisted men. First Lieut. U. C. Hendler now assumed command of the company. On July 30, we took up a new position at the foot of the hill waiting for the barrage so that we could advance. About 3:15 the barrage was started and we rushed the hill.

During the advance the "Jerries" sent over a terrific box barrage of H. E. and shrapnel. We were successful in getting through the barrage and gaining our objective with comparatively few losses. First Lieut. U. C. Hendler being wounded early in the battle refused to go back to the dressing station until his company gained their objective. At 12 o'clock midnight July 30, we were relieved by the Thirty-Second Division, we moved back into the LeCharmel Woods under command of First Sergeant Meighen. On the night of the first of August "Jerry" dropped several bombs killing but one man in the company. On August 2, we left the LeCharmel Woods and hiked to the front and were held in support near Courville. On August 18, part of the company was sent to the front lines at Villettes, near Fismes, and the rest of the company was held in reserve, under command of Second Lieut. Edward R. Foudy, who was assigned to us while we were in LeCharmel woods. On August 25, at 2:00 a. m. we were ordered over the top and our objective was the railroad and to clean out everything to the Vesle river. On account of such a heavy machine gun barrage, hand grenades, etc., from the enemy we were forced to retire to our old positions. Two more attacks were made that night but they were unsuccessful owing to the heavy fire put over by the "Jerries." Here we suffered quite a number of losses. On August 28, we were relieved by the Second Battalion of this regiment and held in reserve until August 31, when we hiked back to Abby-de Igny where we intended getting deloused. Lieut. Hendler rejoined the company at this place and assumed command. On September 2, we were ordered into the line at the same place and on the morning of September 5, we crossed the Vesle river, jumping the first and second battalions and advancing three kilometers to a line of trenches on top of the hill near the North Road. The fighting was very severe, but we had very few losses. We lay in these trenches until 1 p. m., September 6, when we were ordered to go over the top. We advanced to the railroad on the south side of the Aisne river but we had to retire immediately to our old positions because we were not protected on our flanks. On September 7 we were relieved by the French and we went back to Abby-de-Igny where we were deloused. September 10 found us on our way to a new sector. We hiked nearly 20 kilometers the first day and bivouaced in a small village near Epernay just across the Marne river. The next day we started by lorries to Contrisson near Revigny, arriving there on September 12. Here we resumed training and received many new replacements.

About 7:30 p. m. September 16, we left Contrisson and hiked all night with full pack and were bivouaced in a large woods near Reaubeccourt. We rested here during the day and about 7 p. m. we started hiking again which continued all night and the next morning found us bivouaced in the woods near Waly. Rested as usual during the day and started hiking again at 7:30 p. m., hiked all night and were bivouaced in the Argonne Forest near Les islettes. The next night we hiked but one mile and the night following we hiked but one mile and were bivouaced in a woods near Clermont. On September 25, we left the woods and moved to the front lines. September 26, the order came down for us to go over the top, near Neuville, our right flank resting on the Aire river. The barrage started at 2.30 a. m., and lasted until 5.30 a. m. Then we advanced through our wire and the German wire and entrenchments coming to a small town near Varennes. We rested here until around noon, then moving to a line of trenches, crossing the Aire river and entering Varennes as support. We were one of the two companies that mopped it up. During the mopping up of Varennes we suffered light casualties. We remained during the night on the banks of a small creek at the outskirts of Varennes.

The next morning we moved to a new position about three kilometers northwest of Varennes. We advanced across a plateau receiving a heavy fire from the front and the west from the Argonne Forest. We advanced about two kilometers and dug in, being in support of the Second Battalion, where we remained during the night. Here we suffered quite a few casualties, First Sergt. William Meighen being killed. About daybreak the next day we took over the front line outside of Montblainville. We advanced, keeping very close to our barrage until we were held up by machine gun fire. A little later we took the M. G.'s, drawing a heavy shell fire from the woods on our left, from the woods in front, and machine gun fire from our right. We remained here over night, again being in support. The next day tanks came up and cleaned our part of the machine gun nests. In the evening we passed through Apremont and again took over the front line. We remained in a small line of trenches during the night, the next day and following night. We received orders to change our positions and make an attack at 6 o'clock. At 5:30 o'clock, while changing our positions "Jerry" made a counter-attack. With the aid of the tanks the counter-attack was repulsed. This attack lasted about one hour. Suffered several casualties. We remained here until 8 p. m., October 1, when we were relieved by the other battalions. We went back near Apremont where we were held in reserve. On the morning of October 4, we started back to the front line to be held in support of the Second Battalion. On the northeast side of the Aire river. We advanced to a line of trenches about two kilometers from the river, where we were held up by M. G. fire. During this advance we suffered a few casualties. We were in this position until October 7, when we recrossed the river and attacked Chatel Chieffery and the heights beyond. We reached our objective about 10 o'clock and dug in, several prisoners being taken during this advance. Lieut. Roat being wounded, Lieut. Foudy now assumed command of the company. We held this line until the morning of October 9, when we were relieved by the Eighty-Second Division. We hiked back through Mountblainville and bivouaced in a near by woods. On October 10 we left the woods for Abrianville, where we were to enjoy a rest. About October 17, we left Abrianville and moved to Mandres. In a short time we left Mandres for Camp Simon, being in reserve of the other battalions. Several raids were made during our stay here and on the evening of November 9, we moved into the support line, getting ready for the proposed attack on Metz. On the morning of the 11th of November we moved from the support of the battalions of this regiment to the support of the 109th Infantry. Our orders were to leap them at 9:30 o'clock on the morning of the 11th, and as hostilities were to cease at 11 o'clock these orders were recalled and we returned to Camp Simon. We remained here about three weeks.

During the entire operations of this company from July 28, to November 11, 1918, we lost approximately:

WILLIAM W. THROCKMORTON.

William W. Throckmorton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas M. Throckmorton, of Waynesburg, and a member of K Company, 110th Regiment, died at St. Nazaire, France, September 18, 1918, of pneumonia. He was a member of the machine gun corps and was severely wounded in the right arm and hand on July 29, and spent some time in a hospital, but had recovered sufficiently to make the trip home. He was sent to the embarkation port at St. Nazaire and was on board the transport when he was taken ill. He was removed to a hospital where he died a few hours later. Mr. Throckmorton enlisted in Company K at the age of 19. He was educated in Waynesburg high school and had attended Waynesburg college. He was a member of the football and basketball teams and was a star player.

RAGAN H. PIPES.

Ragan H. Pipes, son of Mrs. Emma Ragan Pipes, of Waynesburg, who was attached to Base Hospital No. 61, Beaune, France, died February 20, 1919, of pneumonia, aged 30 years. Previous to entering the service he had charge of the welfare work of the General Electric company of Erie, Pa. He was a graduate of Waynesburg college and had been instructor of music and physical director in Waynesburg high school.

We left Camp Simon for Hattenville, where Captain William R. Cummings assumed command of the company. We were here about two weeks when we were ordered to move to Mars-la-Tour, to perform guard duty. At this time we were part of the Army of Occupation.

We left Mars-la-Tour at 6 o'clock January 17, 1919, and hiked to Conflans where we boarded the train for Barizey-le-Cote. We detrained and hiked about six kilometers to a small village called Allain. Here we drilled and prepared for our homeward journey. We left Allain March 18, for LeMans Forwarding Camp, where we arrived March 21, 1919. Here we completed our preparation for our homeward journey and later we left LeMans for St. Nazaire. On April 29, we boarded the transport Santa Olivia and on April 30, we saw the last of France. On May 12 we landed in America and were discharged May 23, 1919.
